Silent shadows stretch and creep
Distorting shapes to monstrous keep
The growing darkness engulfs the day
The chill of night steps out to play

The swirling quiet breaks my peace
The deafening silence plunders my ease
Once more returns the lonely night
With all but sleep to show its might

I lose again as Thee to death
With returning darkness and every breath
The voices grow louder in my head
As if to chase the quiet's dread

After hours of wasted rest
Glimpses of your memories best
With sweetness soothe the throbbing pain
I sleep my mind is calmed again

But little does the morning know
The pain my wounded heart endured
Dappled rays through windows pour
And day comes knocking at my door...
